Base Pay¹

Approach

Base pay - it is the foundation of rewards as you grow in your career. As you deepen your skills and increase your impact to Accenture, your base pay will increase over time. So how exactly are increases decided?

Talent and group leads make personalized base pay decisions based on a number of factors. One key consideration is where in the base pay range each person is paid. HR uses detailed market insights, including survey data that represents our talent competitors, to develop base pay ranges based on what the market pays people in similar jobs, levels, and locations. Talent and group leads have these ranges available to them as they make decisions to help prioritize/ensure market competitiveness.

Talent and group leads will also consider the skills an individual has, and prioritize increases for people with the skills most critical to their area of the business. Also considered is the impact a person is having and if they are living the Leadership Essentials in the work they do. The greatest increases to base pay occur when promoted to a new level.

We are committed to ensuring pay equity across Accenture, using various methods, including market-leading analysis. We actively seek to address disparity and promote a culture of equality to make sure all our people can advance and thrive.

So who is your talent and group lead? Your talent lead was Amit Kharod, and the group lead was Amit Bhattacharjee.

Variable Bonus²

Approach

Bonuses are awarded to recognize achievements and contributions in the past year. Awards are highest for those who have made the biggest impact to our Shared Success - by working together as One Accenture to deliver 360 value. Talent leads consider the achievements and impact of each person in making bonus decisions. As individual achievements and impact vary from year to year, bonuses are likely to vary from year to year as well.

Note that some individuals may be eligible for one or more bonus programs based on local policies.
